The Jerry Bruce (celebration).

In her right arm she carried a roll of towels, and in her left hand she held a box of face powder. As she entered the room, Mr. Bruce, who was busy working on a piece of furniture, looked up and said, "Good morning, my dear." She walked over to him and said, "Good morning, Mr. Bruce." Then she handed him the box of powder and said, "Here's some for you." He thanked her and said, "Thank you very much." She then went over to a corner of the room and placed the towels on a table. Then she turned back to Mr. Bruce and said, "I'll be right back." As she left the room, she closed the door gently behind her.

Mr. Bruce was still working on the furniture when she returned. He looked up and said, "What do you think of this piece?" She looked at it for a moment and said, "It looks like it's coming along nicely." He said, "I hope so." She then went over to him and said, "I think I'll take this over to the living room and see how it looks in there." He said, "Good idea." As she left the room, she said, "I'll be back in a few minutes."