POLITICAL ANTHEM

Mr. Bell—Senators have been frequently accused of the vice of ambition, and that ambition has been considered, with the exception of the most exalted virtues, the inevitable companion of greatness, and the temporary and constant influence of the passions of men. If ambition is to be considered the most exalted virtue, and if it is to be considered as the only means of attaining to the highest offices of state and empire, the ambition of the senators must be considered as the most exalted virtue of the nation.

THE LEGION.

The Legion of Honor is a military order of the first degree of France, founded in 1804. It is divided into three classes, the first of which is composed of officers of the Legion of Honor, and the second of enlisted men. The Legion of Honor is divided into three classes, the first of which is composed of officers of the Legion of Honor, and the second of enlisted men. The Legion of Honor is divided into three classes, the first of which is composed of officers of the Legion of Honor, and the second of enlisted men. The Legion of Honor is divided into three classes, the first of which is composed of officers of the Legion of Honor, and the second of enlisted men.

THE CLEVER.

Mr. Bell—Senators have been frequently accused of the vice of ambition, and that ambition has been considered, with the exception of the most exalted virtues, the inevitable companion of greatness, and the temporary and constant influence of the passions of men. If ambition is to be considered the most exalted virtue, and if it is to be considered as the only means of attaining to the highest offices of state and empire, the ambition of the senators must be considered as the most exalted virtue of the nation.

THE LEGION.

The Legion of Honor is a military order of the first degree of France, founded in 1804. It is divided into three classes, the first of which is composed of officers of the Legion of Honor, and the second of enlisted men. The Legion of Honor is divided into three classes, the first of which is composed of officers of the Legion of Honor, and the second of enlisted men. The Legion of Honor is divided into three classes, the first of which is composed of officers of the Legion of Honor, and the second of enlisted men. The Legion of Honor is divided into three classes, the first of which is composed of officers of the Legion of Honor, and the second of enlisted men.

THE CLEVER.

Mr. Bell—Senators have been frequently accused of the vice of ambition, and that ambition has been considered, with the exception of the most exalted virtues, the inevitable companion of greatness, and the temporary and constant influence of the passions of men. If ambition is to be considered the most exalted virtue, and if it is to be considered as the only means of attaining to the highest offices of state and empire, the ambition of the senators must be considered as the most exalted virtue of the nation.

THE LEGION.

The Legion of Honor is a military order of the first degree of France, founded in 1804. It is divided into three classes, the first of which is composed of officers of the Legion of Honor, and the second of enlisted men. The Legion of Honor is divided into three classes, the first of which is composed of officers of the Legion of Honor, and the second of enlisted men. The Legion of Honor is divided into three classes, the first of which is composed of officers of the Legion of Honor, and the second of enlisted men. The Legion of Honor is divided into three classes, the first of which is composed of officers of the Legion of Honor, and the second of enlisted men.

THE CLEVER.

Mr. Bell—Senators have been frequently accused of the vice of ambition, and that ambition has been considered, with the exception of the most exalted virtues, the inevitable companion of greatness, and the temporary and constant influence of the passions of men. If ambition is to be considered the most exalted virtue, and if it is to be considered as the only means of attaining to the highest offices of state and empire, the ambition of the senators must be considered as the most exalted virtue of the nation.

THE LEGION.

The Legion of Honor is a military order of the first degree of France, founded in 1804. It is divided into three classes, the first of which is composed of officers of the Legion of Honor, and the second of enlisted men. The Legion of Honor is divided into three classes, the first of which is composed of officers of the Legion of Honor, and the second of enlisted men. The Legion of Honor is divided into three classes, the first of which is composed of officers of the Legion of Honor, and the second of enlisted men. The Legion of Honor is divided into three classes, the first of which is composed of officers of the Legion of Honor, and the second of enlisted men.

THE CLEVER.