FREDERICK DOUGLASS' PAPER

DOCKET, JANUARY 1, 1843.

The crisis of the Douglas question is passing into the history of the country. When the President shall have left this world, and the President's message shall have been generally read, and the President's views shall have gained the conviction of the country, the President's message shall be the most important event of the year.

The President's message is a great step in the right direction. It is a great step in the right direction. It is a great step in the right direction. It is a great step in the right direction. It is a great step in the right direction.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From the public press, we have received the following extracts:

LETTER FROM MISS J. B. WILSON.

New York, Dec. 29, 1842.

My dear Mr. Douglass:

I am much obliged to you for your letter of the 19th instant. I have been in hopes of hearing from you for some time past, but have not heard from you. I have been in hopes of hearing from you for some time past, but have not heard from you. I have been in hopes of hearing from you for some time past, but have not heard from you. I have been in hopes of hearing from you for some time past, but have not heard from you.

I am, &c.,

Miss J. B. Wilson.
