THOMAS.

When the author of the Liberator was a boy, he had in his mind a design to become a牙医. He was not satisfied with the ordinary methods of acquiring a knowledge of the trade, and he determined to travel to a foreign country, where he could learn directly from the master. He journeyed to Europe, and studied under the best teachers. He acquired a thorough knowledge of the art, and returned to the United States with a high reputation. He was soon in demand, and his services were eagerly sought after. He was a successful practitioner, and his name was well known. He was a man of high principles, and he always acted according to his convictions. He was a man of much sympathy, and he was always ready to help those who were in need. He was a man of much skill, and he was always able to perform the most difficult operations. He was a man of much learning, and he was always ready to teach others. He was a man of much energy, and he was always ready to work. He was a man of much integrity, and he was always ready to do what was right. He was a man of much worth, and he was always ready to serve his country. He was a man of much honor, and he was always ready to do what was honest. He was a man of much piety, and he was always ready to worship God. He was a man of much charity, and he was always ready to help those who were in need. He was a man of much kindness, and he was always ready to show compassion. He was a man of much gentleness, and he was always ready to be kind. He was a man of much wisdom, and he was always ready to judge right. He was a man of much valor, and he was always ready to fight for what was right.
