WASHINGTON.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1851.

WASHINGTON.

LETTER TO A FRIEND.

Dear Sir:

I am writing to you from the Supreme Court of the United States, which is now sitting in session. The court is composed of nine justices, each of whom is appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The justices serve for life, and the court is the highest court of the land.

The business of the court is conducted with great dignity and decorum. The justices are arrayed in their robes of office, and the clerks are dressed in their black gowns. The court is held in high esteem by all who have the welfare of the country at heart.

I am happy to report that the country is in a state of peace and prosperity. The government is working smoothly, and the people are enjoying the blessings of liberty and equal justice.

I must close this letter and return to the sessions of the court. I will write you again soon.

Yours truly,

[Signature]

WASHINGTON.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1851.

WASHINGTON.

LETTER TO A FRIEND.

Dear Sir:

I am writing to you from the Supreme Court of the United States, which is now sitting in session. The court is composed of nine justices, each of whom is appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The justices serve for life, and the court is the highest court of the land.

The business of the court is conducted with great dignity and decorum. The justices are arrayed in their robes of office, and the clerks are dressed in their black gowns. The court is held in high esteem by all who have the welfare of the country at heart.

I am happy to report that the country is in a state of peace and prosperity. The government is working smoothly, and the people are enjoying the blessings of liberty and equal justice.

I must close this letter and return to the sessions of the court. I will write you again soon.

Yours truly,

[Signature]