FEODRICK DOUGLASS' PAPER.

The following letter was sent to Mr. Frederick Douglass, now in Europe. It was written by a friend of his in the United States, expressing his opinions and feelings on various political and social issues of the time.

RESIDENT FEDERAL.

Washington, June 6, 1861.

MY DEAR SIR,

I feel the desire of the moment, and feel that we are in a time of deep and serious national crisis. The events of the past few months have been remarkable in their magnitude and extent. The country is divided into two parties, the Unionists and the Confederates. The Unionists are determined to maintain the Union, while the Confederates are determined to secede. The conflict between these two parties is now at its height.

When Abraham Lincoln was elected President of the United States, he was the first African American to hold such an office. His election was met with opposition from the Southern states, who feared that his policies would lead to the end of slavery. In response, these states seceded from the Union and formed the Confederate States of America.

The Civil War, which began in 1861, was fought between the Union and the Confederacy. The war lasted for four years and resulted in the abolition of slavery in the United States. It was a time of great sacrifice and loss, but it was also a time of great courage and determination.

I believe that the war was fought for a just cause. It was fought to defend the principles of freedom and democracy. The Unionists were fighting for a country in which all people, regardless of race, could live in peace andSecurity: A History of the Idea in the West (The New Oxford History of Western Thought and Culture, Volume 4: The Nineteenth Century) (Oxford History of Western Thought and Culture) Download,
