The following is from the Courier & Enquiror.

The Carson League, as it is called in the local press, has started a new career, and the last week's edition of its organ has proved to be a success. The paper is published weekly, and its circulation is limited to the city of Carson, in the state of Nevada.

The Carson League is a political organization that was formed in the mid-1850s in the United States. It was associated with abolitionism and the Underground Railroad, which was a network of secret organizations and individuals who helped slaves escape to freedom in the northern states and Canada.

The Carson League was named after William T. Carson, a former Free Soil Party candidate for Governor of New York who had advocated for the abolition of slavery. The league was active in the mid-1850s, and its members were involved in various political and social activities.

The Carson League was known for its radical views, and its members were involved in various political and social activities. They were active in the anti-slavery movement and were involved in the Underground Railroad, which was a network of secret organizations and individuals who helped slaves escape to freedom in the northern states and Canada.

The Carson League was also known for its involvement in the Free Soil Party, which was a political party that opposed the spread of slavery into the western territories of the United States.

The Carson League was dissolved in the late 1850s, and its activities were largely focused on the abolition of slavery and the promotion of political reform.
