The Slave Crime at Syracuse.

New York Daily Times  (1851-1857);  Oct 4, 1851;  ProQuest Historical Newspapers The New York Times (1851 - 2006)

pg. 2

The next Sunday, Nov. 2nd, it was announced that Jerry was arrested in Syracuse by Deputy U. S. Marshal Allen, assisted by a half-dozen abolitionists, with a detachment of 60 of the best men in the country. It was a clear case of a claim of Mr. John R. Reynolds of Marion county, Missouri, that the negro was his slave, and a fugitive from justice.

U. S. Commissioner Joseph F. Stabler, Esq., for examination. In a few moments, the news had spread, even to the negroes. Two black men, baring their teeth and looking ferocious, would not let the officers come near the negro.

As soon as Jerry was put in the hands of the U. S. Commissioner, he was put in the custody of Marshal Allen, and was sent to Washington, where he was held a fugitive. The first effort of this gentleman was directed to the removal of the handicuffs from the prisoner, in which he was not successful. The prisoner had a second of the peculiar kind, he said, for he was a boy, and had known his master's voice again since he was a child.

It was prospering with the evidence, when the distressing and contradictory within and without the room could apparently be told. He was not less in distress than the negroes in the room, and the poor fellow would not let the officers come near him. He would not let the officers come near him, and he was not able to arrest the negro.

This is the last communication that has been received from this part of the country. There is no news from the military, and there is no news from the prisoners. There is nothing for it but to trust the merits of the negroes, and to hope for their release.

On the 9th of October, Jerry was again arrested, and was put in the hands of the State of Missouri. He is now in the hands of the State of Missouri, and is now in the hands of the prison. He is now in the hands of the prison, and is now in the hands of the prison. He is now in the hands of the prison, and is now in the hands of the prison.