The Commercial Advertiser has an article on "a new writer on the Constitution"—Hon. D. R. M. Dallin, who expresses that gentleman's Schuyler's mountain letter at considerable length. With reference to its main point, The Commercial Advertiser says:

"The apparent meaning in that, the people, it appears to me, will amend the Constitution of the Federal Union so as to provide by partitions, between the states, the gradual and peaceful consummation of slavery, and as end this forever the great object which the Constitution and the Constitution have in common. The public position which the honorable gentleman has taken in this place is the last effort to light on him so far with reference to public sentiment as to throw the country in for the present period and permanent alteration of the Constitution would be con-ed to by the people, and this position in it for the present period and the people, but that the people, instead of the Constitution remaining a main and an adjustment."
