THE VETERANS AND THE TROLLEY.

The Washington Post  (1877-1954);
Jun 27, 1893; ProQuest Historical Newspapers The Washington Post (1877 - 1992)
pg. 4

In the last winter, the fight had been conducted in the streets, the electric cars being the principal weapons. The veterans had been driven from the streets by the police, and the trolley cars had been used as an alternative means of transportation. The veterans had moved to the trolley cars and had continued their fight there. The trolley cars had become a symbol of the veterans' struggle for their rightful place in the city. The trolley company had tried to evict the veterans, but their efforts had been unsuccessful. The veterans had refused to leave the trolley cars and had continued to fight for their rights.